The Medieval period of music chronologically precedes the Renaissance. It covers a tremendously long period of musical history from the fall of the Roman Empire (around 400AD), through to the early Renaissance that begins in the 15 th Century. The Renaissance period then takes up the musical torch and runs from approximately 1450 – 1600.

Why does Renaissance Music Sound Different from Medieval ...

Instrumental music was popular in the Medieval and Renaissance periods in the contexts of out-of-doors dancing, lords' banquets, town festivals and ceremonies, popular songs, etc. The surviving documentation of instrumental music is unfortunately not very good, partly because music notation from this time isn't always very specific about what instrument or voice should be performing a musical part.

In the renaissance, music was composed, rather largely improvised, by a number of people. Rhythms of renaissance music were buoyant, and medieval counterpoints were further developed by renaissance composers to create fugues. A new tuning system, well Tempering, too was developed in this period. What is Baroque Music?
